Lawrence Aquahawks

Founded in 1968, the Lawrence Aquahawks boast over five decades of competitive tradition. However, decades of growth created significant brand dilution and confusion around when, where, and how to deploy their extensive suite of marks.

To resolve this, I audited their visual ecosystem and engineered a cohesive identity system tailored to their operational reality. By accounting for internal stakeholder attachments, historical sentiment, and high-impact touchpoints, the restructured system channels the club's championship energy into clear, practical use cases—from deck apparel and print collateral to dynamic social engagement.

Design for Print

The designs on this page were used as team shirts, placed in email communications, and/or in newsletters to convey emotions of confidence, togetherness, and pride for both fans and the team.

Growth Strategy

We wanted to polish the assets, making sure that everything released is going to invite people in as opposed to pushing them away.
During my time on the Aquahawks, team participation grew 15%.

Suplemental design

These are limited time promotional marks developed to promote meets, seasons, or programs that were intergral to the growth and success of the team at the time of release.

Kansas Swim & Dive Club

“KUSDC” is the permier location for Aquatic Athletes at the University of Kansas to swim and/or dive. They offer competitive and non competitive options and their brand is deeply rooted in the iconic imagery the university maintains. To develop their recognition I pulled the marks they’ve historically used and developed a primary mark that has been approved by the university to promote the club nationally.

Design Process - Mock Brand Project: FLOWW

My friend Reanne is working on filing a patent for a drone with flapping wings that flies stably through the air. Her vision originated with the scenes from the Harry Potter series where the “golden snitch” whizzes through the quidditch arena. I was taksed with creating a couple marks for her that she can use in the interim while she presents her product to get the patent.

Concept:
Harry Potter-style
flying snitch drone with generic branding that is whimsical without using copyrighted materials
